The Statue of a Roman Soldier.

[Original.]

A party of Americans in Paris were permitted to visit the studio of Chapman Barnes, a famous sculptor, also an American. They were piloted by Theodore Guthrie, who announced that Mr. Barnes would not be present. This disappointed Miss Mabel Douglas, an art teacher in the schools at home, who desired to meet the artist.

Guthrie produced a key, opened the door of the studio, and the party entered. There was a grim silence about the place, in which finished and half finished figures stood looking at one another as if they had been living beings suddenly turned to stone. The party had spent some time ogling them when a footstep sounded on the stairs and a man stepped in at the door that had been left ajar. Seeing a party of visitors within, he turned to go away. Guthrie followed him and after a short conversation brought him back.

"This is my friend Mr. Williams," he said, "a fellow countryman of ours and a friend of Mr. Barnes."

"Look at this one," she said, stopping before a plaster cast of a Roman soldier. "Isn't it splendid? What an admirable poise! He is evidently holding up his shield to protect himself from the arrows of his enemies."

"What's that on the shield?" asked one of the party.

"That's undoubtedly snow. Probably he was one of Caesar's men fighting in Helvetia, which was the ancient name for Switzerland. Don't you think so, Mr. Williams?"

"Really," stammered Mr. Williams, "I don't know. Only these artists can tell what they intend to represent. Mightn't that substance on the shield be ashes?"

"Ashes!" exclaimed Miss Douglas. "Whoever heard of the people of that day fighting with ashes. Besides, the texture is not that of ashes. It's snow. He must be fighting in a snowstorm. The enemy is on heights above him."

Mr. Williams stood studying the statue.

"What do you suppose the expression on the face indicates?" he asked.

"Valor. It is the finest representation of battle expression I ever saw. Only Chapman Barnes could have executed it. There are courage, anger, all the passions one would expect in action."

"Come here," called Guthrie, "and look at this Spanish dancer."

"It seems to me," said Mr. Williams, "that if an artist can't make plain what the figure he molds represents he'd better throw down his tools and give up the job."

The words produced something of a shock to the members of the party. They were there by permission of the artist, and any fault finding was, to say the least, ill bred.

"Only those," said Miss Douglas, "who have some knowledge of art and the subject portrayed can interpret an artist's meaning."

"Well," continued the fault finder, keeping his eyes on the statue the while in a growing antagonism, "if a man is only an artist for critics he's no artist at all. I don't like the thing anyway. The fellow looks to me as if he were one of a party of scavengers and his helpers were dumping an ash barrel on him from an upper window."

"Oh, Mr. Williams!" exclaimed Miss Douglas.

"What's the matter?" asked Guthrie, joining the disputants. He looked anxious.

"Your friend," explained Miss Douglas, "is making unfavorable criticisms on a work that has passed the best critics in Paris."

"Critics!" growled Williams. "I don't believe one of them knows whether the man was a Roman soldier or a Roman scavenger."

He kept looking at the statue, complaining of one defect after another, working himself up to a fury with the work he condemned.

"You must admit that there is bravery in his face," suggested Miss Douglas, who was herself becoming angry.

"Bravery! I'll show you how much bravery there is in him." And, picking up a Scotch claymore intended for model use, he brought it down on the statue, shivering it into bits. Then he stood regarding the party as if very much ashamed of himself. Every eye, expressing horror, was on him.

"Explain it, Theodore," he said. "I've made an ass of myself and apologize."

Guthrie, though much troubled, showed an inclination to laugh. "I blame myself," he said, "for perpetrating a fraud. My friends, this is not Mr. Williams, but Chapman Barnes. The statue he has demolished represented the Roman sentinel found standing at his post at Pompeii covered with ashes belched from the crater of Vesuvius. As Miss Douglas says, it has passed all the critics in Paris, who pronounced it a wonder, and was to have been put in marble at once."

While Guthrie was explaining Miss Douglas was giving ominous gulps which ended in a burst of sobs. Barnes went to her and begged her forgiveness for destroying his own work, for which he was to have been paid an enormous sum.

But she got even with him. She declined to forgive him till he had labored long and well to restore the statue. That was not all. She kept him waiting six months for an answer to a proposition of marriage.

How He Became A Stepfather.

[Original.]

One of the meanest tricks ever played by a mother to get rid of a baby was on Walter Bonner, a young man as guileless as the baby itself. Walter had gone to the station to bid some friends goodby. As the train began to move slowly out and Walter was raising his hat again and again to a party on it, shaking hands and handkerchiefs at him, a pretty young woman prettily dressed touched him on the arm and, handing him a pasteboard box, said hurriedly:

"Do please see that this is delivered. I must get on this train."

Walter took the box, and the lady, seizing the guard rail as it passed, stepped on the car and was carried away. Then Walter looked at the box. It was the size of a shirt box—probably had been a shirt box—and without wrapper or string. At one end he noticed a hole half an inch in diameter. The weight was about ten pounds. But what startled the young man was that there was no address. Then he was more startled still at a sound that came from within. It was like a child's toy lamb bleating. Walter removed the cover, and there, buried in flannels and lace, was a newly born baby.

One of the station men was passing, and Walter called to him.

"Say, here's a box a young woman who has gone out on that train handed me, asking me to see that it was delivered. There isn't any address on it."

"What's in it?"

"A baby."

"The dickens you say!"

"I'm going to turn it in. Just take it to the station master, will you?"

"Not much I won't. You can't play that game on me."

The man went on. Walter carried the box to the station master's office, where he told his story and requested that the official take the box off his hands. It had been turned over to him fraudulently in the station and naturally fell to the railroad company for attention.

"Young man," said the station master, "if you want to get rid of your baby you'd better leave it on the steps of a foundling asylum."

"It isn't my baby."

"Can't receive it." And the man turned to other duties.

Walter went into the waiting room. The toy lamb bleating began again. Walter took the cover off the box to stop the noise, which was attracting the suspicious attentions of waiting passengers, and a couple of women caught sight of a pair of tiny arms fighting the air. They came and peeped into the box.

"La sakes," said one, "the dear little thing! Just think of carrying a baby that way!"

"Y' ought to be ashamed o' yourself," said the other to Walter. "The child's hungry. Where is its mother?"

"Gone in the last train." And again Walter told the story.

"Has she deserted you?" asked a woman who came up only in time to hear the end of it.

"That's a cock and bull yarn," said another. "It's a contemptible way of trying to get rid of your poor helpless offspring."

Walter fled, called a cab and took the baby to his own bachelor quarters. There he called upon his landlady, who procured a bottle, warmed some milk, fed the child and put it to bed—in Walter's room. Leaving the door ajar so that the landlady could hear the little one cry, Walter went out and applied at the foundling asylum to have it taken in. In the first place they were full, and in the second they did not propose to have a man put a baby upon them that he was abundantly able to take care of himself, under pretense that it was not his child. Walter went back to his room and with the help of the landlady continued to take care of the foundling from day to day, month to month.

Walter said nothing to any one about the baby. He was expecting to become engaged and dreaded lest some inkling of his having a child in his keeping might get out and his story be disbelieved. One day his married sister, Mrs. Brown, called at his room to see him. With her was Miss Charles, to whom he was engaged. Mrs. Brown insisted on going up to Walter's room and taking his fiancee with her to see what a bachelor's quarters were like. The landlady, as instructed, guarded the way, but Mrs. Brown was a determined woman and forced it. In company with Miss Charles, she entered Walter's room, and there, asleep on the bed, was the baby. Miss Charles went home and wrote to Walter for an explanation. Of course his tale was not believed, and the engagement was broken.

Walter had a standing advertisement in a newspaper that the lady who had left a baby in a box with a gentleman at the station could have it—no proof of property required—by addressing B. 472, office of the paper. The day after the breaking of his engagement, while he was in his room finishing his toilet for dinner, the landlady came up with —who should it be but the young woman who had put her baby off on him! Seeing the child on a lounge pulling away at its bottle, she rushed frantically to it and snuggled it to her bosom.

There is another story, which need not be given here, though it may be well to mention that it is a story of a young married woman driven to desperation by a worthless husband. He died suddenly. The young mother came into a small property and was searching for her babe when she saw the ad.

Bonner eventually became the child's stepfather.

Two on a Tour

By TROY ALLISON.

Copyrighted, 1907, by Mary McKeon.

The elevator of the Washington monument reached the ground after its solemnly slow descent of twenty minutes, and Rhoda Jamison, feeling somewhat overawed by the world as seen from the top of the monument, sat down on a bench near the elevator door. She needed a few minutes to readjust her thoughts and to plan for the rest of the day.

Rhoda had saved every possible penny from her salary during the school term in order to take this Washington trip and had determined to crowd as much sightseeing into her ten days as any other Washington tourist had ever done.

She had spent hours with the visiting milliner in her town planning every detail of the time and had finally arrived in the city and taken a cab directly to the quiet lodgings she had recommended. The milliner had, however, forgotten to take into consideration the fact that the girl had never been accustomed to a city and to city ways and had therefore failed to prepare her for the feeling of desolation and loneliness that grew more and more oppressive every minute.

The Congressional library had satisfied her love of elegance, the capitol and the White House had seemd like old friends from the pictures in the geography and history from which she had taught for months, but in her classes she had been the personality. Here she seemed to dwindle into nothingness, and the things that had been mere ideas and pictures towered over her oppressively, and she was overcome by her littleness and her loneliness and longed for some one to speak to her with a hint of friendly interest.

The big, broad shouldered man sitting on the other end of the bench she had seen walking down the steps of the monument. He had evidently felt so secure in his superb physical strength that he walked down to examine more closely the inscriptions on the stones that could not be studied so well from the elevator.

She saw him take a fountain pen from his pocket, adjust it and finally sort a package of souvenir post cards and begin writing industriously.

She remembered the package she had bought to send her pupils, so she took her own pen from her hand bag and commenced racking her brain for little things to write that would amuse them.

The postal she liked best of all, a daintily colored view of the monument itself, she addressed to her mother. Across it she wrote, "It's so very big, and I feel so little and so lonely."

She leaned forward to flirt a bit of dust from the tip of her pen, and a whiff of air blew the postal from her lap and left it lying at the big man's feet.

He saw it there and, thinking he had dropped one of his own, stooped and picked it up, reading it leisurely.

"I feel so little and lonely," he read, and, surprised, turned to meet the flushed face of the girl.

"It's mine," she said, holding out her hand for it.

"Do you feel that way, too?" he asked eagerly. "That's me exactly!"

"I shouldn't have called you really 'little,'" she answered, with the frank friendliness of a girl who had never met with a circumstance that would cause her to be suspicious of humanity. "I reckon you are referring to the first part of the sentence. 'It is so big' would really seem more suitable."

"That's right," he laughed, looking at the postal, "but that just proves that I can hold more loneliness than you, for I am feeling lonely from the soles of my feet to the top of my new felt hat that I bought in Carson City to see the sights of Washington in."

"At least you are farther from home than I. I'm from South Carolina," she chatted, three days' abstinence from conversation having left her with a surplus on hand.

"I was just sending some of these things to the boys," he said. "They are living in a shack near mine, and it will tickle 'em immensely to get these pictures of civilization. You see, we had been out there for two years digging away for gold without any success, and just as we'd fallen into a fit of gloom and shortage in grub, why, we struck it rich."

"How lovely! Did you find it in chunks?" Her eyes sparkled like a child's.

"That's about the size of it," he laughed, with a whole souled heartiness he hadn't experienced for days. "We sure found it in large sized pieces, and I just thought I'd take a vacation to see the world. I've never been east before."

"Do you like it?" She failed to put as much doubt as to the charms of Washington in her tone as she might have put half an hour earlier.

"I've been about the loneliest person the dome ever shadowed. I could get on very well in the daytime, but I've wanted to sit round the fire at night and talk it over with the boys. How long are you going to stay?" he asked eagerly.

"Ten days. I've been here three." His face lengthened visibly.

"I'll be here a whole month," he added dolefully. "Why don't you stay longer?"

"You see I haven't struck it rich—in huge chunks. The trustees of my school are rather a parsimonious lot."

"I don't know much about eastern etiquette, but I wonder if it wouldn't be tolerably proper for us to do a spot sightseeing together this afternoon?" he said with a touch of boyish shyness.

"I wonder," she said slowly.

The joy of companionship settled the question for them, and he called at her boarding house morning after morning, guidebook in hand, the plan for the day already laid out.

* * * * * * * *

They had left the trip to Arlington for the last afternoon of her stay, and they wandered through the grounds, more beautiful than ever in their early summer foliage, until they reached the spot overlooking the Potomac, where the tall shaft rises in honor of the heroes of the Spanish war.

"This is the loveliest spot of all," he said, as they sat down on the grassy slope with their faces turned toward the river. "Washington will seem dead after I put you on the train this afternoon. Have you enjoyed this week, little woman?" a slight nervousness in his voice.

"It has been—perfect," she said softly. "After I had you to talk to the crowds didn't seem unfriendly at all—they changed into a set of good natured passersby."

"I—er—haven't seemed to miss the boys much lately, either," he said, absentmindedly, watching her slender fingers arrange the largest daisies and clover leaves that she found near her, "but I'll go to missing them again the very minute your train pulls out this afternoon."

He sat up straight suddenly and looked at her almost sternly.

"Do you think a man ought to be forgiven for telling a lie?" he demanded abruptly.

His face paled slightly, and her eyes were huge with a fear that he might in some way confess himself unworthy of the friendly confidence she had placed in him. The unconventionality of their acquaintance stood out in her mind, suddenly, as viewed from the world's standpoint.

"You haven't—lied to me?" she asked faintly.

"Absolutely! No one ever told a bigger one," he said, with his eyes fixed on the clover leaves, failing to see her pallor, "for it will not be the boys I'll be missing, it will be—just you."

Her color came back with a rush, and she avoided his eyes as she rose hastily to her feet, the daisies and clover leaves falling to the ground.

"I'm sure I will be late for my train if we don't hurry back," she said abruptly.

"I almost wish you would miss it—it seems a shame that you cannot afford to stay longer when I have more money than I can possibly spend—unless the town will let me build 'em another library. You couldn't let me—er"— he stammered, not knowing how to express himself.

"No, I couldn't," she blazed, catching his half formed idea.

"There—there—little woman—don't get huffy. I suppose I do bump up against conventionalities occasionally, but somehow I hate for you not to have everything you want," he blurted out.

Her eyes softened, and when they reached the station she watched his broad shoulders as he elbowed his way through the crowd at the ticket office and wondered why, now her face was turned homeward, she should feel more homesick than ever.

* * * * * * * *

When he had put her on the train, he leaned over and spoke determinedly.

"I'm coming to South Carolina before I go back west."

She didn't answer, and he took from his coat pocket one of the clover leaves she had dropped on the ground at Arlington and held it up before her. She saw it had four leaves.

"Do you know what I am going to wish? That when I go back west—you'll go with me"—he waited, a big, awkward boy in his embarrassment, for her to look at him.

"I—I—the train is starting," she said, holding out her hand hastily, "but—if one finds a four leaf clover—he is supposed to get his wish."

Is very careful about her churn. She scalds it thoroughly after using, and gives it a sun bath to sweeten it. She knows that if her churn is sour it will taint the butter that is made in it. The stomach is a churn. In the stomach and digestive and nutritive tracts are performed processes which are exactly akin to the churning of butter. Is it not apparent then that if this stomach churn is foul it makes foul all which is put into it?

The evil of a foul stomach is not alone the bad taste in the mouth and the foul breath caused by it, but the corruption of the pure current of blood and the dissemination of disease throughout the body. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery makes the sour and foul stomach sweet. It does for the stomach what the washing and sun bath do for the churn—absolutely removes every tainting or corrupting element. In this way it cures blotches, pimples, eruptions, scrofulous swellings, sores, or open eating ulcers and all humors or diseases arising from bad blood.

If you have bitter, nasty, foul taste in your mouth, coated tongue, foul breath, are weak and easily tired, feel depressed and despondent, have frequent headaches, dizzy attacks, gnawing or distress in stomach, constipated or irregular bowels, sour or bitter risings after eating and poor appetite, these symptoms, or any considerable number of them, indicate that you are suffering from biliousness torpid, or lazy liver with the usual accompanying indigestion, or dyspepsia and their attendant derangements.

The best agents known to medical science for the cure of the above symptoms and conditions, as attested by the writings of leading teachers and practitioners of all the several schools of medical practice, have been skillfully and harmoniously combined in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. That this is absolutely true will be readily proven to your satisfaction if you will but mail a postal card request to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., for a free copy of his booklet of extracts from the standard medical authorities, giving the names of all the ingredients entering into his world-famed medicines and showing what the most eminent medical men of the age say of them.

The Examination of Our Mineral Springs.

THE MINERAL springs of Sonoma Valley can stand the fullest investigation. We court inquiry and urge the proposed legislation which will provide for the looking into the condition of the many health resorts of California, knowing full well that the mineral waters of our own valley will be found to be sparkling with health and purity. The State Board of Health cannot knock this locality for it is demonstrated each year that our mineral springs heal and benefit hundreds. We have no consumptives as in Southern California and the nature of the baths here are such that there is no possibility of any inoculation by disease. With the increasing number of our visitors no epidemics break out nor are any isolated cases reported. We stamp out disease germs very effectively through the medicinal qualities of our air and waters, for there is no artificial means of sanitation whatsoever which makes conditions as we find them here, ever so much more to be marveled at. We can confidently expect that if all the resorts in the State are examined and reported on that Sonoma Valley will profit and benefit by the investigation.

THE RENEWED activity of the local Women's Club is much to be commended for each year it becomes a stronger factor in the community welfare. It represents so much public opinion and disseminates an influence and throws out ideas that are being blended into the local atmosphere and the progressive spirit will gradually, and in fact is actually becoming contagious and taking hold of our people. It is thus not the actual, the tangible or concrete things by which the effectiveness or utility of the organization should be measured, but by the good example and influence which it exerts over public opinion.

The Sonoma Valley Woman's Club has a dignity and prestige for it has been demonstrated that the interest that prompted it was no fad or fashion but the natural expression of a long felt desire for public welfare and development both individual and collective.

"In men whom men pronounce as ill,
I find so much of goodness still;
In men whom men pronounce divine
I find so much of sin and blot;
I hesitate to draw the line
Between the two, when God has not."

It gives one a genuine soul thrill to read of the philanthropy that really exists in this world despite the contrary and discouraging views as gleaned from pessimists and their publications. The latest good work is that being done by a wealthy friend of the blind who at her own expense publishes a magazine in the raised alphabet system that light and information and amusement may come to those in darkness.

THE FACT that the general health of the community is so excellent does not relieve our people from their duty as to precaution in matters of a sanitary nature. Why jeopardize all the gifts God has given this beautiful valley by permitting refuse in dirty ditches to generate disease? An epidemic might break out which would make people flee and turn their backs upon all our beauties and advantages that they now love to enjoy. Such a scourge is likely to follow our carelessness. Then our homes would be bereft and the business of every one in the valley practically ruined. Let us take time by the forelock for we owe it to this most favored section to keep it pure and sweet and share the health-giving properties with the outside world, rejoicing, profiting and progressing thereby.

ROOSEVELT for life—some of his admirers are accused of having arrived at this verdict. The stars and stripes and the Presidential chair would be very nice for a life termer but judging by the length of his speeches Wm. Jennings Bryan is the only one liable to expect such a lease on the job. It would take him a natural lifetime to write a message.

THE HOPES of this paper and its associate editor are being fulfilled in the sending forth of the literature which is to make Sonoma Valley known to the outside world for we have worked zealously with this end in view and long advocated the necessity for it.

THE SAN FRANCISCO carmen still seem to believe that if they cast their brickbats on the streets their jobs will return to them. This is their distortion of "Cast thy bread upon the waters."

IF WOMEN ever dress like men, which has been predicted, husbands can go through their pockets but we bet they would only find powder puffs, hair pins or miniature mirrors

EXPIRES WHILE MAKING HIS WILL.

John Wallace, a young man who came here for his health a month ago from San Francisco, died suddenly during the early hours of Wednesday morning from hemorrhage of the lungs. Wallace had been suffering from consumption but little thought the end was so near and only a few days before had rented a furnished house and arranged to have his mother and sisters with him. However, about midnight on Tuesday he was suddenly taken very sick and grew rapidly worse. Realizing his condition, he asked to be allowed to make his will and requested those about him to send for the priest. While his friends sought to carry out his requests the young man suddenly expired, dying while in the act of trying to make his will and before the last sacrament of his church could be administered.

Deceased was only 27 years of age. He was employed by Murphy, Grant & Co., in San Francisco for seven years, and is thought to have contracted the malady which caused his death after the earthquake when his employers were compelled to put his department in a damp basement and he was forced to be in a stooping position almost constantly in the low, dark, stock room.

His folks came up from San Francisco Wednesday evening and took charge of the remains.

Deceased was a friend of Mr. and Mrs. Murray who did everything possible for him during the last few weeks which preceded his death.

"Four Sisters" Sinks.

The schooner "Four Sisters," which belonged to the late Capt. Hauto, sank at Bay Point on Tuesday while coming down from Rio Vista with a cargo of wheat consigned to Petaluma. The crew had a narrow escape. The four men aboard, together with Captain Larsen, realizing that the boat was going down, took to the water and managed to swim ashore. The "Four Sisters" was in commission a long time and was thought to be seaworthy. She was sold for a good figure after the death of Capt. Hauto, her former master and owner, who accidentally fell from the side of the little vessel and was killed as a result of injuries to his head.

Senator Kerns Will Speak.

Senator Thomas Kerns, of Utah, who purchased the magnificent property at Kenwood two years ago, will prepare an interesting paper for the Farmers' Institutes to be held at Santa Rosa this fall under the auspices of Pomona Grange. The subject of the Senator's paper will be "The Menace of Consumption in Cattle." Five head of cattle were recently killed at the Kerns ranch in order to prevent the inoculation of an imported herd of short horns which are the pride of the Los Guilicos valley.

The people of this vicinity will have but one opportunity of seeing Ringling Brothers World's Greatest Shows this year, the exhibition at Santa Rosa on Friday, September 6th, being the only one to be presented near here. Deafness Cannot Be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucuous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of deafness (caused by Cartarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

NEW COMPANY TAKES BOYES SPRINGS.

Projected Hotel Will be Erected Now by Directors of the New Corporation.

Twenty thousand dollars worth of new capital has been put into Boyes Hot Springs and the company reincorporated to project plans for the development of the property. Dr. Paramor, of Mill Valley, and a gentleman named Sloane are the principal new stockholders together witn the Lichtenbergs, of San Rafael, who already held an interest in the place.

The first move will be to erect a new hotel which is to be started immediately. The baths will be improved and other additions made to the attractiveness of the resort.

There is some talk of changing the name of the place to the Sonoma Valley Springs but owing to the wide reputation the place has already got in connection with Boves, the original owner's name, the change is said to be disfavored by a majority of the stockholders.

A barn on the Palmer place, south of town, was completely destroyed by fire on Tuesday of this week.

Famous Artist in Valley.

Ernest Peixotto, the famous California artist who has won laurels abroad and has recently returned from Paris, where he has resided for the past twelve years, is visiting in Sonoma Valley accompanied by his wife. Mrs. Peixotto was formerly Miss Molly Hutchinson who will be remembered by many of the old residents of this place. The celebrity, his wife and the latter's sisters, Mrs. Ransome and Mrs. Pringle, of Oakland are guests at the Watriss ranch.

Mr. and Mrs. Peixotto chose to spend their first summer since returning from abroad in Sonoma Valley which they declare compares in its beauties to anything in the world. Mr. Peixotto has made sketches of the old mission and other landmarks and bits of life which have all the advantage of being not only excellent subjects but new ones as well, since this part of California has never been copied as southern California for instance.

Mr and Mrs. Peixotto may remain for some time.

Among the many students who registered at the University of California this week is a promising young Sonoma girl, Miss Elizabeth Davis, who enters upon a six years course of study that she may finally have the degree of M. The young lady is a talented musician and will be greatly missed socially in Sonoma where she has lived so long and done so much to assist in making things pleasant. She will now make her home in Berkeley with her mother who sometime ago purchased a fine home in the college town.

About a year ago when I had a severe case of measles I got caught out in a hard rain and the measles settled in my stomach and bowels. I had an awful time and had it not been for the use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy I could not have possibly lived but a few hours longer, but thanks to this remedy I am now strong and well. I have written the above through simple gratitude and I shall always speak a good good for this remedy.—SAM H. CWIN, Concord, Ga."

Observing the Planet Venus.

[Original.]

Avis Burnham was a young girl who may best be described by adjectives beginning with the letter "p." She was pretty, piquant, pleasing. I regret to say that there is one adjective beginning with "p" that does not describe her. She was not pious. She was rather perverse, and especially was she pertinacious.

Miss Burnham had recently made the acquaintance of Edwin Summers, a young astronomer who was astonishing the world with marvelous discoveries. Miss Burnham had intimated to Professor Summers a desire to visit his observatory and had been told that no one was admitted.

Not long after this refusal, while Summers was at work computing, he received a card bearing the name of Mrs. Amelia Hubbell Bodman. Now, Mrs. Bodman was an English lady who had worked with her husband and achieved distinction for herself in astronomic photography. Summers had not been aware that Professor Bodman or his wife was in America. He welcomed the lady cordially, expressing a great delight at receiving so distinguished a person. Mrs. Bodman, like most women of brains, was not beautiful. She wore blue spectacles—she said she had injured her eyes observing—there were deep dark furrows in her face, and several of her front teeth had been lost without being replaced. Summers invited her to inspect the observatory, taking her first to the equatorial room.

"Our object glass," he said, "is a thirty inch achromatic lens. It has not the reach of some of the larger glasses, but has admirable defining power. What is the size of your glass at the Trickenhurst observatory?"

"Ours? Why, I think ours is a forty-nine inch."

Now, the professor knew well that no such glass had ever been ground. But he was a polite man and possibly thought Mrs. Bodman had worked especially with photographic instruments and had got the sizes mixed. At any rate, he did not take notice of the blunder.

"In here," he continued, "is our meridian circle. Have you a meridian circle or a transit, or both?"

"Both," said Mrs. Bodman hesitatingly.

"What style of chronograph do you use?"

"We—we—don't use a chronograph."

It began to look as if Mrs. Bodman was an impostor.

"We are preparing for observations on Mars," continued the astronomer, "at the approaching conjunction. We propose to watch the color changes creep down the canals."

"Do you use the meridian circle for these observations or the equatorial?" asked the little woman at a venture.

"The meridian circle," replied Summers.

He must have spoken in irony, for the instrument for the purpose would be of no more use than a spyglass.

They were looking up at the instrument referred to, a brass telescope, its axes resting on stone columns, under a narrow slit in the roof. This was all the opening necessary since the "circle" was fixed to sweep only the meridian.

"I don't see," remarked Mrs. Bodman, "how you can observe the stars through that strip up there in the roof."

"Oh, I use this instrument when I'm tired. I go to sleep on the observing chair and wait till the star I wish to observe comes along."

"A good idea," replied Mrs. Bodman. "I'll suggest it to Professor Bodman."

"Do. Tell him not to hesitate to use it. I give my full permission. By the bye, can't you come in this evening? Venus is in fine position for observation."

The lady started. A color came into her furrowed cheeks. "I have an engagement this evening. I'm sorry."

"To visit some scientific society, I suppose. I dare say you are in great demand."

"You Americans are very kind."

"The honor and the pleasure are ours."

"I must go now."

"Sorry I have nothing more to show you. Make my regards to your distinguished husband. I have not needed to see him to know him. His reputation is worldwide. By the way, I have a photograph album of scientific persons, including you and your husband."

"Me?" faltered the lady.

Summers led the way to another room, took up an album and turned to pictures of Professor and Mrs. Summers. Mrs. Summers was a very pleasant looking person of about thirty.

"I recognized you by this," said the astronomer. "It is a fine picture of you."

"Recognized me? You know me?"

"Certainly. You are Miss Burnham. I knew you the moment I saw you. In there you will find water to wash off your furrows. I would advise you to take the court plaster off your front teeth and drop your goggles. You are prettier without them."

"At any rate," said the girl, with a gasp, "I got in."

"Yes, and distinguished yourself by airing your scientific knowledge."

One evening not long after this episode Miss Burnham appeared at the observatory, claiming that she had been invited to see the planet Venus through the telescope. The professor made good the invitation and talked so much about Venus that today he and the fraudulent Mrs. Bodman have half a dozen satellites.

The Right Kind Of a Lover.

[Original.]

A number of ladies, wives of senators and representatives, drinking afternoon tea in Washington, fell to talking about the difficulty of a woman being certain as to the love for her of the man she is to marry.

The lady from Virginia was speaking: "Wishing to be sure that the man I was to marry loved me sufficiently to make great sacrifices for me, I persuaded a friend of mine to grossly insult him, then demanded of my fiance that he should apologize to the man who had insulted him. It was a desperate mental struggle, but love for me conquered. The apology I demanded was made. I was absolutely certain that my future husband loved me, for any Virginia gentleman who will apologize for having been insulted to please a woman must love her desperately."

The lady from Massachusetts: "My husband's family came over in the Mayflower. My fiance would neither drink, swear nor gamble. I made him do all three. I felt sure, ladies, that a Puritan who would do that for me could safely be trusted with my happiness."

The lady from Kentucky: "Colonel Armsby courted me for a long while, during which I could not make up my mind to accept him. The truth is I preferred General Henderson, who"—

"Both of them then just out of the civil war, I suppose," interrupted the lady from Wisconsin.

"Certainly not," replied the lady from Kentucky angrily. "They were not born when the civil war occurred. Do you take me for an octogenarian?"

"Beg pardon; the military titles misled me."

"Both men were very fond of horses, as all Kentucky gentlemen are, and Colonel Armsby owned a stock farm where he bred racers. He produced Bicycle, sired by Jacksonian, out of"—

"Are these details necessary?" asked the lady from Connecticut icily.

"Beg pardon, ladies; I'm fond of horses myself. But to go on with my story. One day General Henderson invited me to drive with him behind his Ladybird, sired by—beg pardon—supposed to be the fastest mare of her time in Kentucky. I accepted the invitation. The general was then but twenty-five years old and one of the most fascinating"—

"One moment," interrupted the lady from Connecticut. "Wasn't that pretty young to win the title of general? It usually can only be done so young in war."

"That has nothing to do with my story," retorted the speaker sharply.

The lady from Connecticut subsided, and the story went on.

"As I was saying, General Henderson had all the charm of manner of the most elegant Kentucky gentleman. He was very proud of his Ladybird. Indeed, I didn't believe there was anything in the world he preferred except me. He expatiated upon the good points of his mare for some time when I artfully drew him to speak of a matter of more moment to me. But I was thinking all the while that I would like to know whether he preferred me to his horse. Just then who should come up behind us but Colonel Armsby, driving his Kentucky Belle, who was to be entered for the coming races.

The colonel bowed politely to me and scowled at the general, being pretty well aware that his rival had been successful. Indeed, I had told the colonel so. The general tipped Ladybird with his whip, and she began to move her beautiful long legs more rapidly. I knew at once that there would be a desperate race between the rivals and that neither would give up to the other unless forced to do so. If one had had a track for it, there would have been no especial danger, but for two men who were courting the same woman to fight it out on an ordinary road"—

"I appreciated the danger, for I knew General Anderson would kill his $10,000 horse rather than be defeated, and I feared he would kill me too. Well, as soon as we caught up with the colonel both horses dashed forward as if shot out of a cannon. Both were of the best Kentucky stock. Ladybird was perhaps half a hand higher than Kentucky Belle, but the latter had a trifle longer reach. The colonel got his start a few lengths behind us, but was steadily gaining. Presently he came up neck and neck, and it was not long before he was full half a length ahead. Then, coming to a gully in the road, rather than force us over it, he reined in for us to take the smooth passage, but his horse was so much better than the general's that he soon regained his loss. He was a length and a half ahead when we struck a stone, lifting our buggy into the air and lifting me several feet higher than the buggy. When I came down, the buggy had gone on, and I sat in the road.

"I was stunned, but kept my eyes on the racers. Presently I saw Colonel Armsby slow up. General Henderson went on. The colonel turned, drove back and, alighting, knelt beside me, with an agonized expression of countenance. Then he lifted me into his buggy and drove me home. The general, thinking his rival was still in the race, drove on for a mile before discovering that he had gone back.

The test had been too much for the man I had chosen, but not too much for the man I married. A Kentucky gentleman who will lose a race for the woman he loves is a lover of the good old days of chivalry. OSCAR COX.
